NEW VEGETABLES.

Strange Varieties Being Introduced Here From Mexico and Europe.

The department of agriculture is making experiments with many new vegetables which are expected to prove useful in the United States if the people can be persuaded to grow them, says the Saturday Evening Post. Its explorers are fetching them from various parts of the world, especially from Mexico, which is known to possess many food plants that would be of much value if introduced into the United States.

Among the available Mexican vegetables are various kinds of peppers and several species of tomatoes which are unknown to us. For example, there is the husk tomato, which is about the size of a horse chestnut and is contained in a sort of detachable rind that is removed when the fruit is ripe as a preliminary to cooking it. It is not good raw, but is said to be excellent when stewed or fried. The Mexicans preserve it as a sweet pickle.

Then there is a brand new kind of cucumber which is quite an oddity in its way inasmuch as it explodes with a loud report when ripe, throwing its red seeds to a distance. Its chief use is as a medicine, but the vine on which it grows is so handsome as to be desirable for gardens. More valuable is a giant okra lately obtained from Europe which has pods five or six times the ordinary size. Soon doubtless it will be commonly grown in the United States and will be obtainable in our markets. It has a delightful flavor.

Another European vegetable which Uncle Sam wants to introduce is the tuber of a plant that looks a good deal like marsh grass. It is only about as big as a hazelnut and when eaten raw resembles coconut in flavor. This is called chervil and may be cooked in a variety of ways. The plant is a kind of sedge.

Special attention is being paid to the cultivation of new pot herbs on the experimental farm which the government maintains near Washington, and the seeds of the best of these when a sufficient supply has been obtained will be distributed to farmers and gardeners. Notable among them is a plant from India called basella, which bears fruits that look like little blackberries. It is a vine, has pink blossoms resembling those of the arbutus and is said to be delicious.
